IMPARTIAL, NOT NEUTRAL.

SHANGHAI, SATURDAY, AUGUST 23 1862.

Our columns this week contain only one communication on the topic of the day, viz: The Better Government of Shanghai, so that our readers generally may be under the impression that the subject is exhausted, and contributors lacking. Neither of these is the case. We have reason to believe that the ventilation of the question in our columns has led almost every member of the foreign community to think seriously about it, and when the time comes for an expression of opinions, many who have not given their opinions through the press, will do so by word and deed in public meeting assembled. Of contributions we have had several, which we decline to publish, as they contain opinions and expressions which are irrelevant, and calculated to stir up strife and national animosity. Now, as it is essential that unanimity should prevail on whatever course be taken to promote the object in view, we have deemed it prudent to decline the publication of these communications; assuring the writers thereof, that we value their opinions on the main points at issue, and that they will have weight in our own views of the question.

Having thus at our command the advantage of ascertaining the general opinions of the residents, we use our privilege of conducting this journal to aid in pointing out the most practicable way to the better government of Shanghai. Upon the whole, from a careful perusal of these communications, we are convinced that the plan of a "Free City" is not sufficiently popular to be carried. The obstacles at present in the way are so great, to secure unanimity amongst the community, that it would be advisable for the future to leave that scheme on one side. In having been the first to hint at such a form of constitution for our future government, we do not abandon it in despair, for the day is not far distant when independent legislative and executive bodies may be forced upon us by the growth of the place

Under these circumstances the next best thing to be done, is to revise and strengthen existing institutions, so as not only to grapple with the evils around us, but to meet more serious exigencies that may arise. Let Reform—a wholesome reform—be the order of the day. In the able communications of "New Cathay," "Quid Pro Quo" and "Cosmopolite," are many and valuable suggestions to guide the meeting of Land Renters in the course of next month. The first named correspondent has especially directed his attention to this phase of the question, and points out where reforms in our institutions are most needed, and the revisal of our slender code of laws and regulations most necessary. We trust that when the meeting takes place, they will assemble with a unanimous feeling on the absolute necessity of reform on these points, and that they will proceed like business men to discuss them, and speedily pass the necessary measures, that they may come into immediate effect.

(From the Daily Shipping & Commercial News of August 21.)

THE BETTER GOVERNMENT OF SHANGHAI.

Sir.—The opponents of the new scheme that have appeared as yet in your paper, do not seem to me to have got to close quarters with the subject. They state assumptions which they make objections, and in one or two instances take the arguments pro and use them con.

"A Resident" complains of me that I push hastily into the details of the scheme us, if it were already carried, though he had shown himself in ten few days before, with the Defence Committee, because they would not do the same thing.

But to my mind the proper course to pursue is to descend to the details at once, and discover if we can if the thing is practicable, and if the system would really work to advantage for all—for the place itself, for China, and for our respective nations. If we should be so fortunate as to prove this, we could then with some confidence, lay our plans before the representatives of the treaty powers. Whether they would be entertained, is a question between themselves and the Emperor of China. The mere assumption of your correspondents, that they would not entertain them is not conclusive.

Our business is to present the scheme in as clear and complete a light as we can. We must apply for something to somebody. Let us apply for something worth having.

"A Resident" goes on to ask if the matter is not to be subjected to the men who make treaties.

The question is superfluous; to convince these men that the scheme is practicable and desirable being exactly the object of our efforts. Of the same character is the first point made by "New Cathay," that the treaties would need to be abrogated or revised. That is not an objection, it is a difficulty. They must of course be revised, and it is the end of our efforts to induce the revision for an especial object. "A Resident's" next questions are where he unwittingly brings up one of the strongest arguments in favour of the plan. He asks who saved the place from capture by the rebels, and if we are to be a free city, who is to defend us.

The answer is that the scheme expressly provides protectors. It is the foundation of the whole plan that we should have a certain and perfect protection against the only enemies that can assail us—the rebels or the Imperial Government of China. A far more certain and perfect protection than we now enjoy; for, if the plan is accepted and carried out, it would be under a sacred pledge from those great powers—a pledge that could not be broken by any of them without dishonor.

When "A Resident" asks who saved this place seven months since, I answer unreservedly, two men, Admiral Hope and Admiral Protet. Upon the decision of two men, or of one of the two, for either could and would have saved the place, hung the momentous question whether our trade should be destroyed and our lives and property imperilled. No one can deny this fact, for it is perfectly well known that many, if not most, of the officers of the army and navy were of the opinion that Shanghai city should be given up to the rebels, under the instructions which then governed the two services. Had it been given up we should have been absolutely at the mercy of a horde of armed miscreants, the very dregs of mankind. If we had escaped destruction, our trade would not, as the Chinese would have fled as if from an army of dragons.

Such a danger could never occur under the protectorate. All the complications that have hitherto obscured the military intellect would be swept away by the fact that this was a neutral city.

As to "New Cathay's" question how it would be if the treaty powers quarrelled among themselves—that also is a question for us to propose as the answer is an argument on our side. As things are at present, such a quarrel might lead to very unpleasant and troublesome complications.

Under the scheme there could be none whatever. The place would not only be neutral, but each of the powers would have pledged its honor that it should be so. They would be actually concerned to maintain its neutrality, instead of the privilege resting alone upon the law of nations, an insufficient defence sometimes for the weak. The belligerent power which remained in possession of these seas would be the only defender, pro tem. but the circumstances of the case would cause them to have a great force here, ample to allow them to protect us against our only possible enemies, the Chinese.

"New Cathay" objects to the attempt, because he does not see who would prepare the constitution, and thinks the difficulties of the internal arrangements and judicial system alone sufficient to conquer us. Other people, however, have succeeded in making arrangements under which they could live, and it would be perhaps pusillanimous in us to refrain from the project, because we do not find the details ready made to our hands. Probably Tls. 50,000 judiciously expended, would give all the advice needed, when the time came for the details.

There is a difficulty upon this point however, for it is desirable to prove by details that the scheme could be made to work, and no doubt, both time and the peculiar abilities necessary, are lacking for the elimination of much detail. A general plan perhaps would be found sufficient, especially if the proposition, if made, must be made in very general terms as respects the connection of the proposed free city with China and with western powers.

I do not propose to discuss "New Cathay's" own remedy. There is nothing in it essentially different from the system already thoroughly tried and found wanting. We have no faith in minister's decrees. They do not overawe malcontents nor give Consuls confidence.

When Mr. Alcock inaugurated the old system we were all as full of hope as "New Cathay" is now. The hope proved delusive. The system never did work thoroughly even in the best of days. "New Cathay's" management of the regulations are excellent, but of what use to amend the superstructure when the foundation is unsound?

I repeat, we must ask something of somebody, let us ask something worth having.

Your obedient servant.
COSMOPOLITE.

THE TAIPING REBELS NEAR SHANGHAI.

On Friday afternoon a reconnoitring party proceeded in the direction of Tsiaan. It consisted of Captain Borlase, C.B., Senior Naval Officer, and the Commodore of the French squadron in port; Capt. Wortham, R.A., and Capt. Punmure Gordon of the Shanghai Rangers, with eight troopers, the whole party being under the command of Quarter-master General Gemmell, A.D.C. On reaching the British outpost at Pawho, they found a detachment of about 80 men of the 31st drawn up waiting to accompany them. These, the mounted party left behind and proceeded to the front some four or five miles, when they reached an Imperialist camp which they at first mistook for a rebel stockade. On enquiry they were informed that a looting party of about 50 rebels had come down on the previous day, most of them on ponies, intent upon foraging. These belonged to the Nan-hsiang garrison, where they are reported to be in large numbers, as well as the neighbouring districts. They are said to have been reinforced by the rebels driven from Tsing-poo by Ward's forces. Their rice supplies are failing them, and hence the necessity for these foraging parties. It is believed that at present they have no intention of making an attack upon Shanghai.

EXPOSURE OF COFFINS WITH THEIR DEAD.

To the Editor of the
"North-China Herald"

Sir,—A very limited residence in Shanghai has sufficed to convince me, that the promoters of the scheme of self-government, might with advantage bring some pressure to bear on the Municipal Council, with a view towards developing to the utmost extent, the executive capability that may have therein a latent existence; which even under present restrictions might be beneficially directed, and serve as a preparatory course of training for the many responsible duties which so extended a field of action as the recognition of Shanghai, by the great powers, as a free city, would inevitably entail.

Amongst the most noticeable nuisances of the "Model Settlement," which call for immediate action, are the funeral obsequies and conflicted exposures, practised by our Celestial fellow citizens. That toleration may be carried to an excess, is, I submit, proved by our patient endurance of the ear-splitting din of native instruments, and, what is of more consequence, our tacitly accorded assent, to the festering corpses of departed Chinamen, remaining above ground for indefinite periods; further polluting the already vitiated atmosphere, to an extent that can hardly be realized. It is, I think, in opposition to every principle of sanitary precaution, that an inert executive are not acting, and we have a right to expect a greater immunity from such revolting and pestilence-spreading exhibitions. How far foreigners are justified in interfering with these disgusting practices may be matter of dispute, but, it will at all events be conceded, that within the pale of the settlement, no abstract idea of right or toleration, should prevent the immediate putting down of the evil in question. It will therefore be scarcely credited by those whose daily walks or rides, do not take them through the constantly increasing Chinese suburbs, that in one particular spot, in full view of all passers-by, some 20 or 30 coffins, of varying antiquity, are carelessly grouped; foul and pestiferous odours greet the olfactory nerves, as one hurries past, and a rapid glance, reveals rotting remnants and the loathsome spectacle of human decomposition; the coffins, hastily constructed, yielding to the pressure of the pent up gases, or warped by the sun's intense power, leaving but little to the imagination of the passer by, as to exposing in its fullest deformity, the rapid and inevitable decay of the earthly tenement, when abandoned by its vivifying influence.

Is this state of affairs creditable or the reverse to the model settlement of Shanghai, in the year of our Lord 1862?

I am, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
VIATOR.

NARRATIVE OF A JOURNEY FROM YINGT ZE-NAN-CHWANG TO MOUKDEN AND TIENT IN.

(Concluded from the North-China Herald of August 9th 1862.

At sunset I found myself at a large village 20 miles from Moukden. Here were shops of Chan-tse merchants on their return from trading in the north of Manchuria; and notwithstanding they were over 200 in number (possessing carts), there yet remained unoccupied a comfortable room, in which I speedily ensconced myself for the night.

The number of houses of entertainment was of itself a sufficient proof of the great traffic existing in this direction, as along the entire line of road, from Moukden to Peking at distances varying between ten and fifteen miles, at least one good inn will always be met with. Here welcome resting places use as distinctive signs a number of loops, or a small basket hung conspicuously in front of the entrance

It is customary to build after a common model, and inns are so alike, that an early arrival will delude himself into the belief, that he has slept in the same room—a long range of buildings forming the front, and running along both sides of the wall are kangs, the flues of the kitchen communicating therewith maintaining a comfortable temperature throughout the cold weather. A few small private rooms are sometimes partitioned off at the end of the long one, but as a general rule a partition being run along the centre of the whole interior space, that portion towards the back is divided into a number of small rooms. A yard or enclosure of some kind invariably adjoins the Inn. Both sides usually devoted to carts and draught animals, feeding troughs, and rude stalls and a due allotment of lean quadrupeds being all the ear-men have to expect in the way of "fixings." In the remaining side or back part of the yard are generally some isolated quarters erected to the necessity of traveller's birth and education mixing with the common herd. I am inclined to think however, a slight experience of the Thermometer below Zero would be sufficient to remove for a time, all exclusive ideas from the mind of even the most rascally tourist and induce a hurried entry into he nearest inn, defining the men of the degree, crowding in the public apartment. The inn-keepers family, usually resides on the premises.

After supper, I entered into conversation with the Shun-see Merchants, who in a great state of terror themselves, tried hard to infuse a little of their superfluous despondency into my mind; narrating with bated breath, the exploits of various robbers, levying contributions on the surrounding neighbourhood, but observin their tricks did not produce the desired effect reference was made to an incident of the day's travel—two heads suspended in baskets from the tops of poles on the road side. These ghastly waysides ornaments appeared, they said, to a gang of highwaymen who incautiously pursuing their avocation in broad daylight, were captured and decapitated.

The warnings of these persons corroborated all I had previously heard, of highwaymen and encouraged some reflection.

To return to Ying-tse was not to be thought of for a moment, whilst continuing the journey alone, appeared highly dangerous. Luckily a middle course presented itself, and taking advantage of a good matured puffy checked merchant's offer who braggard of his hired escort, I agreed to join myself under the shadow of his wing whilst crossing the Leao-plain. The hour of departure did not suit my fancy; but having made taken breakfast, I was ready with the rest to start at A.M.

Nothing can be imagined more strikingly picturesque, than our cavalcade in motion, wind-

Almost and rear guards of pike and match lock men and mounted patrols on the flanks kept a good look out for robbers, whilst the occasional cracking of huge whips and cutters addresses to their beasts, resounding through the clear atmosphere, produced on the mind feelings of the most exquisite exhilaration. Gaily, we proceeded, and at length about 12 o'clock, found ourselves at the Lama no which delight. The ice being between 3 and 4 feet in thickness, the ice being between 3 and 4 feet in thickness, no bridge was necessary, and two carts passed over with the greatest ease.

Proceeding at a snail's pace, by 12 Noon, our cavalcade reached a large town called Shin-mun-wa-tze, which was skirted and eventually passed by the prince, which we skirted and eventually passed by the prince, which we skirted and eventually passed by the prince, which we
